FOREWORD

To the readers, who for the first time are becoming acquainted with Who's Who Among North American Authors, it is necessary to repeat what has been included in the foreword of former editions, that they may understand its scope and requirements.

In point of territorial distribution, only living authors of the United States and Canada, and their possessions and neighbors, who have either been born in these countries, or who have worked therein, can be considered North American authors. In a few cases, however, authors of American parentage, although born and living in other countries than those of North America, have been included in view of their American or Canadian parentage; and such applications for admission to future editions will be considered.

Inclusion cannot be paid for, the standard of literary excellence being the only admission possible. All sketches are gained direct from the author, or writer, insuring accuracy of detail and dates.

Magazine writers, journalists, columnists and contributors to the press, or those whose writings are confined to government bulletins, proceedings and abstracts are invited, no less than authors of books, to correspond with the editor with a view to inclusion in the Press section of the next edition of this work.

AUTHOR: The Voyage of the Jeannette, 1883 (edited); Explorer's Wife, 1938. Father was sea capt. who entertained Napoleon the Third, Consul of France, before his accession to the throne, together with many other dignitaries on his ship. Husband, in command of the Arctic Steamer Jeannette, undertook a voyage of discovery through Behring Straits in search of the North Pole in 1879. Through this effort lost his life; ship caught in the ice pack north of the Straits and although he and his men had made all preparations for this event and traveled over the shifting ice to Siberia, a distance of more than five hundred miles, they came into open water when they reached the North of Siberia and were overtaken by a severe storm. One of the three boats under his command foundered at sea, another was blown eastward of the Lena Delta where the men met natives who saved them, but the third boat was not rescued and those on board died of cold and starvation. The records of the Expedition were found in this boat and brought back to the U.S., and formed the basis of The Voyage of The Jeannette, part of the large journal written in ink on board the Jeannette until she sank, and two small logs, kept in pencil while traveling over the ice, giving complete records of events and findings.
